Dissertation: The relationship between R&D partnership formation, social embeddedness and innovative performance: a multi-level approach of social embeddedness

Multiple quantitative research based studies (based on descriptive and empirical analyses of the MERIT-CATI database) on the relationship between R&D partnership formation, social embeddedness and innovative performance of companies. In line with social network theory, a multi-level approach of social embeddedness is being used by making a distinction between environmental embeddedness, positional embeddedness and relational embeddedness. These studies resulted in journal articles in Journal of International Business Studies, Technology Analysis and Strategic Management and a book chapter in Transnational corporations and economic development: from internationalization to globalization.

Committee: Prof. dr. M.A. Carree (Maastricht University) (chair)
Prof. dr. A.P. de Man (VU Amsterdam)
